Ah, October. Leaves turning brown, air getting chillier, pumpkins getting spicier aaaaaand Apple Stores dropping from the internet. It can only mean one thing: Apple's new iPhone is almost here. That's right, the company's next-generation phone, likely called the iPhone 12, is expected during an online-only event at 10 a.m. PT Tuesday.

We all know that 2020 is a strange year, even for Apple. The company just had a September product launch event in which it did not reveal an iPhone! But the time is upon us. Apple will likely reveal its next generation of iPhones at its upcoming event on Tuesday, October 13, 2020. There are also several other devices and accessories expected simultaneously, so this could be a packed product announcement.

AirPods Studio

Could it finally be time for AirTags? Truly? Apple Silicon Macs

It's probable that the AirPods Studio will feature Apple's H1 wireless chip (or perhaps serve as the debut platform for a next-generation wireless chip) and is rumored to sport the U1 ultrawide band chip, too.

And that's the story of the next Apple TV, too. There's just not a lot going around about it. We don't know what kind of chip it's getting (maybe an A12Z, with its eight-core GPU), or any other features it might have. 8K? Probably not, as we're a ways away from 8K being a mainstream thing. It's just that the Apple TV is a single-to-three-use device (streaming, gaming, home control), and the new features it gets always come in software.

We can probably assume that Apple will show a slick, pre-recorded video presentation to show off its new products, likely running about two hours. The company's last two events, the keynote for WWDC 2020 and its September Apple Watch/iPad event, were both well-produced, zooming around Apple's campus to various executives in charge of different products.

While the iPhone will be a key product we see at Apple's event this year, and likely what most people focus their attention on, the company's expected to have other devices to show off. Those include new Apple-branded over-ear headphones called the AirPods Studio, potential updates for the $299 HomePod speaker, a potential "iPhone Mini" that sits somewhere between the $399 iPhone SE and $699 iPhone 11 and maybe, potentially, even Apple's long-rumored AirTags beacons to find your lost keys, among other things.
